Climate change models for eastern China predict decreasing precipitation i.e., less water.

	Chinese dig deep for water In China, a severe drought has forced the government to look for alternative ways to find water. They have been digging deep underground in search of the much needed resource. But as Al Jazeera's Melissa Chan finds out, they may create an even bigger problem.

St. Valentine? Nah. Canis lupus.

Lupercalia, the True Origin of St. Valentine's Day

Lupercalia is uniquely Roman, but even the Romans of the first century were at a loss to explain exactly which deity or deities were being exalted. It harkens back to the days when Rome was nothing more than a few shepherds living on a hill known as Palentine a

777 Rue de Sewage

	Paris Underground Paris, City of Light, really is a tale of two cities. One of them is above ground, with its beloved Eiffel Tower and Notre Dame. That's the city the world sees. And then there's the city very few of us will ever see -- an underground Paris, the 'souterrain.' The story is also the cover feature of Natio...

The CNN video of this was eerie.

	Massive fish kill and 1000s of birds fall from the sky in Arkansas Food Freedom foodfreedom.wordpress.com On Thursday, Dec. 30, the Arkansas Game & Fish Commission reported a massive fish kill in Roseville, along the Arkansas River in a one-mile stretch. But only a single species is involved: drum fish. The next...

Has America become one vast "Pottersville?"

	America: Once It Was 'a Wonderful Life' CommonDreams.org Like quite a few others, the old James Stewart/Donna Reed movie 'It's a wonderful life' is one of my Christmas traditions, with this year having been no exception. The film recalls many things for me, especially the best of what so very much of America once was, the endless reasons...
